California Observers Find Industry Is Making Progress Toward Goal

'HIRE-AND-FIRE' RULE NOW OLD-FASHIONED

Leveling of Seasonal Labor Movements and Industrial Fluctuations Is Sought

SAN FRANCISCO-A steady job for every man is an ideal toward which American industry is steadily striving. Prosperity for all is intimately bound up in this progress mately bound up in this progress and, as the goal is more nearly approached, prosperity will be spread more evenly to include all classes.

Such is the opinion of speakers who addressed a special meeting of the Commonwealth Club of California, called to hear recent findings of the club's industrial relations section, as well as discussions of those findings by industrialists and observers.

regent of the University of California, told the meeting that problems of legislation are involved in the industrial readjustments which must take place. In outlining progress already made and pointing out possibilities for greater improvement, he said, in or greater improvement, he said, in part;

"Industry has already accepted some of the moral criteria upon which this problem must base itself. The old-fashioned hire-and-fire employer who thought that the ideal condition of business was a crowd of workingmen around his gates every morning looking for jobs, is nearly extinct.

"At this moment, when the competition for jobs is keen, and when, under the unmitigated law of supply and demand wages would go down, are bales, feet as for that traudes which is employed.

The club's section has spent years in studying employment problems, and attacked the subject from the standpoint of trying to discover the best means for building solid and lasting prosperity for the future.

Much has been done to better the conditions of labor, and to make the certainty of continuous employment assured, it was declared. But much remains to be done to stabilize employment, to curb seasonal fluctuations and to insure to the individual worker the pension to which long years of service rightly entities him.

BORDER IS LAID TO ARAB TREATY

CLASH ON IRAK

Wahabi Tribes Attack Fortified Wells at Busayya, 80 Miles North of Boundary

PROCLAMATION OF 'HOLY WAR' DENIED

Ibn Saud's Followers Develop "Superiority Complex" -Conferences to Be Held

By CAPT. OWEN TWEEDY JIDDAH-I have learned the main eason of the Wahabi clash with Irak uring my visit here this week. The crux of the quarrel is a divergence of interpretation of the boundary treaty negotiated at Basra in 1924 by the British envoy, Sir Gilbert Clayton. a noted Arabia expert. Collisions have occurred over the demolition of Irak's fortifications at Busayya and the subsequent massacre of Irak's tribesmen by Felsal-ed-Darwish, a leader of the Wahabi sheiks of the district, and were followed by alarmist reports—afterward denied—of the proclamation of a "holy war" by the Arab ruler Ibn Saud, King of Hejaz

WASHINGTON (AP)—A statistical defense of the abandonment of union operation by the Consolidation Coal Busayya lies 80 miles north of the boundary, and therefore is claimed by Irak to be beyond the region im-plicated; wherefore, it could be fortifled without an infringement of the treaty. Ibn Saud claims that Busayya is the only water in the long stretch of border age-long common to the tribes of both sides, hence the well, by the terms of the treaty, is not fortifiable.

Negotiations Called For

The Basra treaty stipulated for a resort to negotiations in the event of disputed interpretations or tribal raids across the frontier. Justificaraids across the frontier. Justifica-tion of the Irak or Nejd contention is only establishable by negotiation. Darwish's resort to shock tactics created a tension which have since been heightened, firstly by the British air force bombing reprisals for the massacres of Irak tribesmen, secondly, by the sensational press reports from Basra, which should be accepted with the greatest reserve. accepted with the greatest reserve, and thirdly, by the Wahabi counter-propaganda throughout Arabia, attributing the incident, though most

But Ibn Saud's notable restoration of security and order of the pilgrimhas largely reconciled Islam Wahabism but only as the custodians of the Moslem holy places, for hith-PASADENA, Calif.-Frank Howl- erto there is no sign in the Arab neighboring populations of any desire of the acceptance of, or even sympathy with Wahabi tenets The Wababi conquest is directly ligious fervor and virility of the Nejd tribes, but as a result Ibn Saud's followers have developed a superiority complex with their vis-avis neighbors, finding expression in the growth of Wahabi religious and territorial irredentism, regarding Arabia generally and Irak and Transjordan particularly.

The problem of solving the busayya impasse, according to the terms of the Basra treaty, is greatly complicated on account of the Watribesmen's distrust and unfamiliarity with international diplo-matic machinery, the high feeling between the tribesmen on both sides massacre and the subsequent re-prisals, and the British armed intervention as the mandatory of Irak. The present inaccessibility of Ibn Saud himself increases the difficulty. He necessarily remains with his tribes around Riyadh, capital of Nejd and a convenient center whence to supervise Darwish, who undoubtedly has been out of control and needs a strong hand.

Note From British

But the comoteness of Riyadh, which distanced hundreds of miles of telegraphiess desert from British representatives of the Persian Gulf and Jiddah, create a dangerous de-lay in exchanging ommunications. The British Government has ad-dressed to Ibn Saud a note disclaiming all idea of aggression against his independence and reserving full rights as a mandatory to protect the boundaries of the tribes of Irak against raids from Nejd.

On account of the difficulty of communications, the progress of the ne-gotiations is of the slowest, but Ibn Saud is known to be restraining the impetuosity of his followers. Despite such inflammable material being dan-

BRITISH WISH TO AGAIN OPEN NAVAL PARLEY

Paris Not Greatly Moved by Proposals Advanced by Lord Cushendun

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON WIRELESS TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR PARIS—The British proposals for the reduction of the tonnage and the armament of capital ships appear to armament of capital ships appear to arouse comparatively little attention in Paris, though it is now revealed that conversations have recently proceeded between France and England on this subject. Some weeks ago it was rumored that the British Government had approached the Quai d'Orsay announcing its intention to reopen the naval disarmament question. No confirmation of this could be obtained, but it is evident that something is going on behind the scenes.

Limited as the British plan is, it is an effort to recover something of the ground lost at the last naval conference, but it is precisely because the plan scarcely touches French ships that there is a relative lack of interest. In three years, however, the naval holiday decreed by the Washington convention expires, and cruisers may be freely constructed. Altogether 49 new capital ships, distributed in the proportion of five-five-three among the United States, England, Japan, France, and Italy are three among the United States, England, Japan, France, and Italy are foreseen. The reduction of tonnage and the caliber of the cannons would obviously mean considerable economy. It is remarked that numerous naval experts regard 20,000 tons as sufficient.

The French would doubtless lean toward a general reduction of larger vessels, but on the other hand it is felt that the American view would call for a conference, if a conference is practicable on the smaller vessels, believing that a reduction confined to capital ships would give Great Britain an advantage over America. The prospects of an immediate conference therefore is adjudged doubtful.

American Admiral Sees No Advantage in Proposals

BY WIBLESS TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

GENEVA—Admiral Jones will remain a day or two in Geneva, comparing notes with the American delegation, returning with Hugh S. Gibson to Brussels, visiting Paris on his way home. He gaw the French and Italian naval experts on Sunday, so he was well posted concerning what happened during his absence, including the result of the talks between the naval experts. That their importance is exaggerated is gathered from the fact that the British Admiral, Kelly, was not instructed to remain to see Admiral Jones. The latter regrets that he did not arrive in time for the preparatory Disarmament Commission, because he was anxious to contribute his part in the discussion on disarmament. with any special mission beyond his official duties as the technical adviser of his Government, and the rumor he was instructed to sound opinion on the reopening of the naval conference in the near future is unfounded. This, it is said, will not exclude his exchanging views with the naval experts and other powers at Geneva and elsewhere.

But Admiral Jones does not intend to visit England. The American delegation does not regard Lord Cushendun's proposals as calculated to effect economies or a great step toward disarmament, for no new capital ships will be built before reconsideration. If desired, there would appear to be no objection to making a date for the next meeting of the Washington signatories a few months earlier in the year.

Japanese Views on Plan TOKYO (P)—It was pointed out at the Japanese naval ministry that Great Britain would stand to gain the most by her proposal Saturday at Geneva for reducing the displace-ment of battleships and the size of guns. The proposals have not been received here officially yet, but the Minister of Navy said they would apparently require very careful study. He considered agreement would probably be difficult, as the circumstances of each power is different.

Great Britain would stand to gain, it was said, because of having in its possession the newly constructed battleships Nelson and Rodney, which with their 16-inch guns would leave

Pursue "objectivity" as they will, these central European composers seem to find it as difficult as their Russian confrères to escape the clutch of sentiment. Hindemith and Schreker—fearsome names, these, with a large still pressible conceptations of with all possible connotations of acerbity. But listen to their songs. Hindemith chose six poems by George Trakl, which seem in transthe early nineteenth century ever produced. He wrote for them music which, with all its "modernity" of tiom, is quite as romantic as any thing Schumann ever set down. The result is a sort of companion piece to "Manfred." As for Schreker, his song might have been written by Strauss.

Pierné, being a Frenchman, has less trouble in achieving a detached attitude. Indeed, considering that his "Sonata da Camera" is dedicated "to the memory of Louis Fleury," is remarkably gay. The middle movement, marked "Sarabande," contains an elegiac note, but the other movements are transparent and sparkling.

Rachmaninoff

Sergei Rachmaninoff drew a large audience to his recital at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. He began with a pair of transcriptions by Busoni of Bach's organ choral pre-ludes, choosing "Now Comes the Gentile's Savior" and "Rejoice, Be-Fugue, Op. 29, a whimsical Fairy Tale by Medtner cast in the mold of sonata, and Scriabin's Sonata No 4. These he played with his usual uminosity of tone and clarity of structure, outlining phrases sharply yet preserving the unity of the whole Music from Chopin and three of his this music warmth and colorfulness predominated. Turning to Liszt, Rachmaninoff verged into the brilliance which he musters when he pleases his followers and in which his style of playing seems most individual. Miss Présent, who comes to Boston preceded by splendid notices, seemed yesterday afternoon not quite at her ease and probably not at her best. The orchestral background supplied her was no so smooth and deft as it might have been, and occasionally she and the players did not completely coincide. There were also some few instances during her solo nassages when blurred passages passages when blurred passages marred her performance. But there

'Miss Chagnon has a fresh, clear voice, pleasantly youthful in quality. She uses it with considerable skill, emphasizing its more desirable features. In the smooth, rounded phrases of the Italian airs, Scarlatti's "O Cessate," Pergolesi's "Se tu m'ami" and Carissimi's "Vittoria" she sang to best advantage. Their straightforward melodiousness seemed in closest accord with the singer's abilities. In some of the other songs there was tendency to-ward slurring that detracted from effectiveness. Only in that way can the subject be made real and vital to the pupil."

Teacher Acts as Guide

The teacher plays the part of nide, opening a new field of interest

The teacher plays the part of guide, opening a new field of interest to the child, who gets the thrill that comes from discovery of the beautiful and wonderful in the commonplace. To do this, it is necessary that the teacher should have had this same experience. Otherwise the main purpose will be missed.

"Among a large number of elementary school teachers in a city there will be some who, though required to give some of their attention to nature teaching, have taken little genuine interest in nature studies—the interest that comes from direct contacts and investigation. In the Springfield schools it has been the systematic aim to give such teachers the kind of experience that will kindle such interest.

"This is esteemed as all the more important because of the progressive policy of linking different subjects in a broader knowledge of each, whereby nature study becomes a fertile source of analogies and helps to give the pupil an intelligent knowledge of his city and the factors that mold history and determine the bent of social progress. In this way the rock or plant becomes illuminating. C. Robertson, Cambridge, Mass., class orator.

In addition to this, reports from many states tell of greater attention given in the schools to teaching the harmful effects of alcohol and the benefits of prohibition, especially since the declaration of the National Education Association at its last convention at Seattle, Wash., in favor of this instruction.

The 222 double grid tube which has this case the fixed flament resistbeen recently put on the market has ances are the only pieces of apparatus in the set which must be a number of advantages when used as a radio-frequency amplifier. Nu-as a radio-frequency amplifier. Numerous requests have recently come in for the engineering data on this tube used in conjunction with the single control Browning-Drake kit-set, so it is thought best to give out all the available information on the tube and the resulting circuit.

As most experimenters and radio fans probably know, the 222 tube has two grids, one, forming a complete shield around the plate, while the other grid, which is known as the control grid, corresponds to the grid of the ordinary 2014 tube. This tube thas two advantages, one is the very small capacity between plate and control grid, the other is tremendous amplification due to the effect of the screen grid on the mutual conductance of the tube. The resultant capacity between plate and control grid is made up of two small capacities in parallel and a third in series. Thus, the resultant capacity between plate and control grid is extremely small and in many cases it is unnecessary to neutralize. other grid, which is known as the control grid, corresponds to the grid of the ordinary 201A tube. This tube has two advantages, one is the very small capacity between plate and control grid, the other is tremendous amplification due to the effect of the screen grid on the mutual conductance of the tube. The resultant capacity between plate and control grid is made up of two small capacities in parallel and a third in series. Thus, the resultant capacity between plate and control grid is extremely small and in many cases it is unnecessary to neutralize.

However, using a circuit utilizing regeneration on the radio-frequency plate and control grid must be neu-tralized in order to secure the great-est amount of efficiency from the tube when used as a radio-frequency am-plifier. Thus, as will be noted in the neutralization is shown though the amount of capacity for neutralization

The 222 also has a very high impedance, so that it is desirable to couple it directly into the tuned circuit preceding the detector. When direct coupling (really an auto transformer) is used, a parallel feed system must be employed which would consist of a ½ mf. blocking condenser and a radio-frequency choke. In the Browning-Drake circuit this has already been adapted, as it is extremely advantageous to keep ali of the radio-frequency current out of the B supply. Consequently, but one change is necessary to utilise the 322 as the R. F. amplifier. This change consists in connecting the plate of the 232 through a ½ mf. condenser directly onto the stator plates of the second tuned circuit instead of to the primary of the radio-frequency transformer. Thus, as will be noted, the primary winding of this transformer is not used when the 222 is employed.

This connection from the plate of the tube directly across the tuned circuit puts the capacity between plate and screen grid across the second tuning condenser, so that it is necessary, in some cases, to put a small condenser of about 15 mmf., representing this amount of capacity, across the first tuned circuit. This condenser is indicated by the representing this amount of capacity, across the first tuned circuit. This condenser is indicated by the dotted lines in the diagram. However, connecting the .0001 mf. series antenna condenser to the stator plates of the first tuning condenser sometimes adds enough capacity so that the trimmer condenser will take care of all of the variation between the two condensers throughout the wave band. A little experimenting on this point is necessary.

out the wave band. A little experimenting on this point is necessary.

Of course, the radio-frequency part of this circuit and the detector part of the circuit, when using the 222 with tuned plate must be completely shielded. This may be readily accomplished through the use of a set of shields which may be secured from the Browning-Drake Corporation. Complete instructions for putting on these shields come with each set, so that no details on this point need be taken up here.

One other niece of apparatus is of no details on this point need be taken up here.

One other piece of apparatus is of importance when using the 222. That consists of a one-half mf. condenser connected between the screen grid and the ground. It should be noted that the grid on the ordinary four-pronged UX socket is connected to screen grid and that the control grid connection comes to the top of the tube. The set-builder should make sure that these connections are right, otherwise satisfactory results cannot therwise satisfactory results cannot otherwise satisfactory results cannot be obtained.

Lengthy details on construction med not be given, as the schematic ring diagram is very clear. All the leads carrying radio-frequency current should be kept as short as possible. These connections should be made exactly as indicated, above the sub-panel, leaving the filament wiring and other low potential leads below the sub-panel.

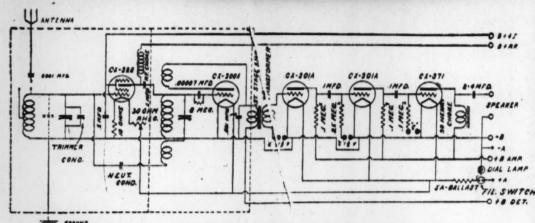

It will be noted that the 222 has a filament voltage of 3.3 and a filament current of .132 amperes. Consequently, it is necessary to put in the resistances shown in the diagram in the filament circuit so that the five volts across the 300-A or 240 tube used for a detector will be reduced to the correct value.

The 10 to 15 ohm resistance shown is also used for blasing the first tube. If the constructor desires to use 199 tubes for detection and audio amplification, and use three No. 6 dry cells for supplying the filaments of these tubes, he will find that the 222 tube can be quite satisfactorily operated from 3 volts. outstanding feature of the new administration has been the construction of good arterial roads from the heart of the city to the outer suburbs, the reservation of thousands of acres of tree-clad, picturesque hills, for the people, and the improvement of parks and gardens and children's playgrounds. The Greater Brisbane Council was the first local government authority in Australia to cetablish a town planning department.

The council is elected for three years, the mayor having salary of £1000 a year, and the aldermen, £400 a year.

BY WHEAT JURY

SYDNEY, N. S. W .- The cere-

Greater Brisbane scheme is its extremely wide charter. Parliament has practically conceded "Home Rule for Brisbane." In respect of its ordinances, the council is placed in a much stronger position than any other subordinate legislature in Queensland. The approval of the State Government, however, is necessary for the making of ordinances. The Government can repeal them, and its approval must be obtained before the council can borrow money, except by overdraft. Nevertheless the whole scheme is an unprecedented delegation to a subordinate body of some of the powers of government.

One of the great benefits of the new scheme has been the adoption of broad-gauge views. When the 19 small councils were in operation, there was more parochialism, and misunderstandings crept in between council and council; rates were different in each area; there was no co-ordination. Now one rate is struck for the whole area, and the

HOTELS AFLOAT ARE

PECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR ists visited Norway during 1927, according to available statistics. This figure indicates that the number of tourists was greatest in 1926, a year during which prices were still exeedingly high in this country.
In 1927 hotel prices were reduced by an average of 15 per cent, while the state railways made a similar reduction and the touring car owners reduced their charges by 20 per cent. Steamship tickets were but slightly reduced. It is probable that the reduction so energetically started last year will continue in 1928, the currency having almost regained its pre-war value and prices being continuously falling. Hotel prices now are on the whole no higher than in other countries, but they still are somewhat uneven. The touring charges now are on a pre-war basis. The 10 per cent hotel and restaurant tax levied by the Government, so unpopular among the traveling public, will probably be abolished from the budget term starting on July 1

More than half the number of tourists visiting Norway arrive on board foreign floating hotels; their visits thus consist only of a cruise in the western fjords, while they do not get any opportunity of knowing other parts of the country, nor the people, its culture and activities. Energetic efforts on the part of the country's own hotels and transport facilities are necessary if Norway is to compete with these foreign tourist ships.

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR CHESTNUT HILL, Mass .- After a wait of eight years, Miss Edith Sig-Boston, runnerup in 1920, is men's indoor tennis champior of the United States as the result of her victory over Mrs. Charles J. Hubbard Jr. of Cambridge Saturday on the covered courts of the Longwood Cricket Club here. Mrs. G. W. Wightman of Brookline, who has won more lennis titles than any other woman in the United States, added two more on Saturday when, paired with Miss Sarah Palfrey of Brookline, the present national girl champion indoors, she won the doubles title from Mrs. William M. Shedden, Chestnut Hill, and Mrs. J. Lewis Bremer, Boston.

In the mixed doubles final Saturday, Mrs. Wightman, paired with Henry L. Johnson Jr. of Waban, Mass., captured the title by defeating Mrs. Hubbard and Henry R. Guild, Brookline. The secre of this match was 6—8, 6—1.

In the singles final, the first match on Saturday afternoon, Miss Sigourney found herself behind when Mrs. Hubbard, the former Miss Anna H. Fuller of Cambridge, runner-up in 1925 as Miss Fuller, captured the first set at 5—4. However, Miss Sigourney showed championship polse when she refused to let that bother her. In the second set Miss Sigourney made fewer orrors than her opponent and stroked herself ahead until she finally won the set at 6—5 to make the match even. By the time the third set opened Miss Sigourney's stroking seemed to improve while that of Mrs. Hubbard was weakening. Miss Sigourney captured the third set and match at 4—6, 1—3, 6—1.

In the first set Mrs. Hubbard, who had battled her way to the finals through extra-set matches, made 11 placements to Miss Sigourney's one, and two service aces, while Miss Sigourney did not score any. Mrs. Hubbard made more errors than her opponent, driving 11 balls into the net against nine, and shooting dutside the lines on 20 occasions, while the new champion made 13 outs. Two doubles faults were registered, one against each player, and during the set each player scored one love game,

Pennsylvania M. C. Wins Indoor Polo Title by Defeating Yale

Makes New Intercollegiate Elis Put Up Fine Struggle but Fail by One Point-Victors Slightly Better on Defense but Otherwise Teams Are Quite Evenly Matched

> SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU NEW YORK-Pennsylvania Military College, under the leadership of Daniel N. Jones, finally raised itself to the Intercollegiate indoor polo cham-pionship, Saturday night, when on its fourth attempt it defeated Yale Unrounth attempt it detected Tale On-versity, winner two years ago, in the final round of the 1928 title tourney, at the Squadron A Armory. It was a hard struggle all the way, but in the last three minutes of play D. N. Jones scored the winning goal, and his de-fense held the advantage until the final bell, giving the Pennsylvanias the victory, 7½ to 6½.

in the last period were responsible for keeping the former champions in the game to the end. P. M. C. also altered its attack, with Bower remaining chiefly in reserve, while Jones, with his powerful drives, and J. F. Whitehurst in advance, the chief scorers. Whitehurst scored four of his team's goals, while long drives by Jones accounted for three more. Phipps scored the first five goals for Yale.

Each scored a goal in the first period, with Phipps leading off, but ost helf his advantage on a foul, and lones hit the ball into the goal soon afterward to place his team ahead.
Yale went into the lead in turn in the second chukker, when passing shots from F. C. Baldwin '28 and Wallop gave Phipps three shots that landed inside the sideboards of the P. M. C. goal. But a drive by the Pennsylvanians was stopped by Baldwin, only to have Whitehurst quick angle shot. This left Yale in the lead at half time, 3½ to 2.
Pennsylvania College was aggressive in the third chukker, and before the period ended it was leading once more, only to be tied again at the bell by Wallop's first goal. Whitehurst scored first, from a scrimmage, only to have his score neutralized on a pass from Wallop to Phipps. But Whitehurst point loss on a foul by Bower, followed but the score was tied once more, at ball close in, and his short drive went in easily. Yale, however, did not give up and kept the cadet's star back busy warding off drives until the final bell ended the struggle. The summary: PENNSYLVANIA M. C. YALE

I feated the representatives of the United States Naval Academy in all three weapons, was a great surprise. The other qualifiers in the eastern group were Harvard University in foils and épée, and Dartmouth College in saber. This was a great improvement for the Cambridge team, as Dartmouth had been a strong favorite to qualify in all three weapons. Massachusetts Institute of Technology was also represented, but the best that its representatives could do was to qualify Leonard Siller '29 for the individual honors in epée.

At West Point, the cadets qualified with all three weapons, but the team of Cornell University defeated them at foils. But the Ithacans were in turn defeated by the pair of New York University in the épée contest, losing the right to qualify by one bout. Hamilton College was represented, but failed to place its team in the contest, while a single representative of Ohio State University, Edward Lorber '28, qualified as an individual in both foils and saber.

Capt. Norman C. Cohn '28, was the mainstay of the Columbia University team. He qualified for the finals individually in both épée and saber, and furnished most of the points for his team in both of these events. The foilsmen, Alan Tompkins '30, Hugo Alessandroni '29, and Gennaro Cautino '30, had the closest battle, winning from the midshipmen by the margin of one bout. Tompkins was also a member of the qualifying team in épée, while Donald C. Dow '30, was Cohn's teammate in saber.

NEW SWIMMING MARKS Princeton also furnished a surprise in this section by preventing the Midshipmen from qualifying in épée. Tracy Jaeckel '28 was the hero of this success, aided by a new member of the squad, who was recently discovered among those graduating from the freshman class in February, in the person of Stanley Kimball '31, by Joseph De Vos, the new coach at Princeton. The Naval Academy had an entirely new team this season, every member of last year's squad having graduated last June.

The nationals had been awarded to Springfield, Mass., which city, Mr. Truitt said, had declined the regatta after it had failed to obtain the Olympic tryouts also. Springfield had planned to hold both mesets at the same time. The Olympic rowing committee awarded the tryouts to Philadelphia and then Springfield turned down the nationals in favor of this city. The Olympic tryouts will be held on the Schuylkill on July 8 and 7. Many Members Never Known to Go Up in Air Are Enthusiastic About Aviation After Flights Over Capital-Gain Higher View of Flying

JUST about at its peak, now, is the current New York art season, what with the Spring Academy opening its doors this week and with any number of interesting displays at the many galleries. The Whitney Studio Club is holding its first annual sculpture exhibition at its Eighth Street studios and with signal success. Set about with an eye to individual effect, the various sculptures look their best. Arnold Geissbuhler stands at the forefront of the assembled company, although here and there among the fifty-odd exhibitors there is good work to be seen.

Mr. Geissbuhler's work is startlingly mature and commanding for one as yet unknown to any extent in up-town circles, but I venture to predict that his forthcoming Fifth Avenue exhibition will launch him overnight among the arrivés. He possesses something of the innate gravity of Charles Despiau, something of his tenderness of touch as well. He has style, and an underlying ruggedness of structural form that assert itself at the first glance. In bronze Mr. Geissbuhler makes a more dashing display than in terra cotta, although his portrait bust in this latter medium may fail to assert itself because of faulty lighting.

Elizabeth Chase (who is Mrs. Geissbuhler and already known through her successful up-town exhibition of last season) exhibits a fine bronze head of her husband. Mahonri Young shows one of his recently exhibited French genre figures, "The Woodcutter;" and Gertrude W. Whitney exhibits models for her ambitious Columbus Memorial to be erected at the Port of Palos, Spain. Beige colored materials seem to be very much in vogue among the sculpturing fraternity this year, following perhaps the general trend of fashion, and there is marked increase in the use of alabaster. Carl Walters, Concetta Scaravaglione, Reuben Nakian, Victor Salvatore, Jo Davidson (with still another portrait of Mussolini, to whom the American artist must be distinctly persons grata), Salvatore Billotti and Betty Burroughs are other exhibition of "Distinguished Jo Davidson

An exhibition of "Distinguished Portraits of Women" at the Grand Central Galleries set forth the some-what distressing fact that nine times what distressing fact that nine times out of ten the painter who goes in primarily for portraiture is seldom able to rise above the exacting requirements of getting a likeness, a division of labor that naturally keeps him down to the mean average of representational painting with at best some sort of technical bravura thrown in to gloss over the want of pietorial fundamentals.

George Bellows' portrait of "Kath-rine Rosen," so well studied for one and design and "painter's qualtone and design and "painter's quality," makes the average canvas in this exhibition look decidedly tame. More than a hundred family treasures have been got together for this portraitists' holiday, and the result is rather dispiriting. The original title of "Portraits of Beautiful Women" selected for the exhibition bears out the facts of the case better than the one eventually used, there being no complaint about the sitters' pulchritude, although the distinction of the average entry is often quesof the average entry is often ques-

Orpen and McEvoy

A small early portrait of Mrs. Stanford White by Thomas Dewing is a gem of the first water, and "Mrs. Jeremiah Mason" by Gilbert Stuart is another. There are two full-length Zuloaga portraits, wearing a bit thin with time, and two interesting creations from the hand of Sir William Orpen, done in his crosslit, fiat-background manner, and holding up very pleasantly. A water-color portrait by Ambross McEvoy-brings forward this English painter in all the soft, glamorous charm that in all the soft, glamorous charm that he brought to portraiture, he being one of the few men able to carry on something of the tradition of early something of the tradition of early English portraiture in modern times. The collection possesses what is said to be the earliest known portrait executed in the American colonies executed in the American colonies—that of Richard Bellingham, Governor of Massachusetts, painted by William Read in 1641. Then there are several interesting Washingtons, including that painted from life by Rembrandt Peale when that artist was 17, and the large family portrait by Edward Savage. The original of the Vaughan type Washington is also in the collection.

Some of the Clarke canvases now hang on the paneled walls of American interiors—that from the Derby House, Salem, the drawing room from the Powell House, Philadelphia, and the two rooms of Pennsylvania German origin from the Muller House in Millbach, Pa. The rich peasant-like interiors of the Pennsylvania Germans, however, are used as backgrounds for the arts and crafts of those people. They are paneled in dark wood, with admirable setting for decorated chests, bride boxes, gaudy dinner service, and other items clouds climb above the mountain tops and pour out their contents on the upper slopes. From the mountains come cool breezes which waft over the city a light mist. A few daintily dressed women raise umbrellas or parasols, but no one else bothers about it.

The rain generally picks the early morning and early evening hours to do its bit toward preserving the beauty of Oahu. Thus you have the most brilliant rainbows at breakfast time nearly every day and start the day off in full harmony with nature. Perhaps statistics will show that there are more rainbows per day, or week, or year elsewhere in the wide world, but it hardly seems possible. There are the morning rainbows that spread in a perfect arch from those on the other. The brilliant green tops on the other. The brilliant green to be world, but it hardly seems possible.

DEFINITE sense of satisfaction comes with the completion of a good work, with the carrying to successful termination of some worthy plan. But the fact that so slight a measure of satisfaction is commonly realised, that so general a sense of incompleteness is felt by humanity, indicates that there is not a sufficiently clear comprehension of true aims and of right methods of bringing them to fruition. Apparently few know, with constancy, exactly what they should do, or the best way of doing what they undertake. Indeed, Ruskin has expressed the belief that "failure is less frequently statistically and the supremacy, universal hermony, the entireness of Cod, good, and the nothingness of evil." To finite all the harassments of mortal existence must be of the texture of dreams, illusions of material series which may be intelligently disposed of through the acceptance and application of their opposite, truth. And this is precisely what Christian Science is enabling its adherents to accomplish; for, as Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 593). "Christian Science brings to light Truth and its supremacy, universal harmony, the entireness of Cod, good, and the nothingness of evil." To finite all the harassments of mortal existence must be of the texture of dreams, illusions of material series.

Geese in Debate

At Fiddler's Island in the Thames,

Just outside Oxford town,

That riverward came down

Oh, how they craned and trumpeted!

The strident challenge flew:

Twas, "No, I don't agree with that!"

And soon their eager clamor ceased,

And, "I am telling you!"

They took the water one by one. And sat there side by side;

A silent, serried, gleaming fleet,

With a steady breeze a-beam, They drifted slowly from the shore.

Each bright bill turned

Passive and still they gazed ahead;

The wind blew on their flank; grey, compacted, floating isle, and landed just as they set forth,

Singly, in order due; And sought their island pasturage,

When loud the gabble grew.

chine convertible preferred and Adams Express.

Spectacular gains also were recorded by several bank stocks as buying was influenced by recent capital changes and talk of new mergers.

Foreign exchanges opened steady, sterling cables ruling around $4.88\%.

High grade bonds again were actimulated at slightly better prices in today's market. Chief interest, however, centered in the public offering and prompt oversubscription of the $55,000,000 Republic of Colombia issue, again indicating a brisk demand for new material.

Many gilt-edged failway securities continued to sell readily around their high prices for the year, while there was further accumulation of the public utilities. Philadelphia Electric $\frac{4}{\psi_8}$, Utah Light & Traction $\frac{6}{8}$\frac{1}{9}$, and North American Edison $\frac{6}{8}$\frac{1}{9}$, and some of the Seaboard mortgages again moved upward fractionally.

Kayser $\frac{1}{2}$'s stood out in the convertible group with an advance of 2 points. Andes Copper 7s also gained, but trading appeared less active than in recent sessions.

Some French industrials led the foreign group, Paris-Lyons Mediterranean $\frac{1}{2}$'s stood out in the convertible group with an advance of 2 points. Andes Copper 7s also gained, but trading appeared less active than in recent sessions.

Some French industrials led the foreign group, Paris-Lyons Mediterranean $\frac{1}{2}$ changing hands rapidly, while the Government issues inclined to heaviness on profit-taking. The foreign list as a whole was irregular.

The closing was strong. Bidding for the mail order issues was vigorous in the last hour, Montgomery Ward and Sears Roebuck advancing 6 and 9 points respectively. Pennsylvania rose above 70, the highest in more than a fecade. General Motors continued to rule above 197, while American International shot up 5 points. Total sales approximated $\frac{1}{2}$,900,000 shares.

Old Town Clock

By REBA M. STEVENS

byely sunny morning.

But scarcely had he settled back night. But scarcely had he settled back into quietness when the strangest fancy took possession of his funny old head. Looking down on the busy square where all sorts of people were bustling about, getting started on the day's work, he fell to thinking that, although he could see them all quite plainly, yet he could not hear their voices, and that not one of them ever took the trouble to speak to him anyway. They did not even to him anyway. They did not even look up at him unless they wanted to him anyway. They did not even look up at him unless they wanted to know the time, and then they were apt to shade their eyes and squint and scowl instead of giving him the same smiles he saw them give each other.

"No," he thought, grumpily, "they don't care much about me after all. I guess."

Poor Old Town Clock! From that he went on and on. He bethought himself that although he had served the community long and well no one had ever taken the pains to tell him so. No one ever climbed the long stairs to visit him; no one had ever hung a flag on him as they often did on the bronse statue that stood in the yard below. In fact, Old Town Clock was so busy feeling sorry for himself that when the time came to strike the half hour he entirely overlooked it; and when 10 o'clock rolled around, mercy me! he was so upset and befudded that he gave a few ugly rattles deep in his throat and banged out, "One-two-three-four-five-six-seven-eight-nine-ten-sleven!"

saying the same thing.

Tom the Janitor set to work to see what he could do. Every spare hour of each day he busied himself, oiling and polishing, tightened a screw here and loosening another there, gently trying the springs, carefully prodding and prying about for dust and dirt, rubbing and golishing, tightened as crew here and loosening another there, gently trying the springs, carefully prodding and prying about for dust and dirt, rubbing and golishing, tightened as crew here and loosening another there, gently trying the springs, carefully prodding and prying about for dust and dirt, rubbing and golishing, tightened as crew here and loosening another there, gently trying the springs, carefully prodding and prying about for dust and dirt, rubbing and polishing, tightened as crew here and loosening another there, gently trying the springs, carefully prodding and prying about for dust and dirt, rubbing and polishing, tightened as crew here and loosening another there, gently trying the springs, carefully prodding and prying about for dust and

No pleasanter spot in all the wide

Old Town Clock had his home. Right in the center of the town, with the shops gathered closely about him, he could see all the interesting things that went on there, and could look, too, far out over the town—this way and that—to where trees, and houses, and gardens lay.

The pigeons, great flocks of them, nested on the roof at his feet, and cooed and pecked about in the friendliest way. All the breezes swept gayly around him, and he felt so near to the sky and so near the people, too, did honest old Town Clock. And so, as he had done time and time again, he told them all, in clear, ringing tones, "One-two-threefour-five-six-seven-eight-nine;" this lovely sunny morning.

A flasco is a complete failure, especially a theatrical failure.

The word is the Italian term for flask or bettle. According to authorities the flaurative significance was given to it by Venetian glass workers, who when any flaw occurred in making a beautiful piece of glass, turned the article into a common flask, a flasco. Hence the failure of any pretentious undertaking may be called a flasco.

tious undertaking may be called a flasco.

The word is now sufficiently reputable English to be used in common parlance expressing the disapprobation of an audience when a singer or actor or musician fails to please. It is certainly preferable to the American slang phrase, "a frost," indicating failure and consequent disapproval.

The second syllable is accented, fi-as'-co, and c in the final syllable is like k. The plural is either flascoes or flascos.

Bringing the Americas Together

S THE League of Nations weaning Latin America away from the Pan-American Union? This question was asked repeatedly in Pan-American Conference circles at Havana last month, and now that the conference may be viewed in perspective, three tendencies are indicative of the answer.

First: there were numerous instances at Havana when the delegates were reminded of the difficulty of securing co-operation between the American states without simultaneously cooperating with Europe. When it came to standardizing consular procedure, for instance, it was pointed out that from one-third to one-half of Latin America's trade was with Europe and that it was useless for the Americas to adopt uniform invoices and regulations which would conflict with those of Europe.

A second and perhaps even more important factor in influencing Latin America in favor of the the League of Nations was the opposition of the United States to the rotation of the chairmanship of the governing board of the Pan-American Union. At present this office is held, and always has been held, by the Secretary of State of the United States. Latin-Americans, however, proposed that it be rotated among their representa-tives at Washington. Mr. Hughes opposed this.

Almost simultaneously with his opposition, the Council of the League of Nations was meeting in Geneva under the chairmanship of a Latin-American—Francisco Jose Urrutia of Colombia. Preceding him in this chairmanship have been three other Latin-Americans, while the Assembly of the League at different times has elected three Latin-Americans as its presidents. Latin-Americans, therefore, feel that they are definitely a part of the League of Nations.

Last of all, they feel that they can say anything they wish at Geneva, and need be afraid of no reactions from the United States. In fact, Geneva makes a most excellent forum for critising the United States, as illustrated last year by the delegate of Panama, Eusebio Morales. Scoffing at the idea of common interests in the Western Hemisphere, he said:

The idea that there is a single spirit representative of America, and that all the nations of the New World are linked by common interests stronger and more numerous than those that bind them to Europe, is a mistake. The Argentine Republic and Guatemala, for instance, have fewer interests in common than exist between the Argentine and England, or between Guatemala and Germany.

This is a fair statement of the general attitude of the Latin-American toward both the League of Nations and the Pan-American Union. He vants to continue his co-operation in the Pan-American Union. His increasing economic dependence on the United States, both for loans and for markets, makes this imperative. Moreover, he feels that the Pan-American Union is important in bringing the peoples of the Americas closer together. But his greatest faith, especially in cultural and political matters, rests in the League of Nations.

Is a Vertical Trust Legal?

TROBABLY the most important issue inrolved in the case of the so-called "packers consent decree," which was recently upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States, whether the antitrust laws prohibit the stablishment of vertical trusts. A vertical trust, by the way, is one in which the corporate entity has acquired the sources of production, the means of transportation, the facilities for manufacturing in all its various lines, and the methods and agencies for distributing any particular commodity or service, so as to be entirely indeendent of other organizations for the unretricted production of what it has to distribute. A careful reading of the decision may leave the impression that this issue was not passed upon directly, although the sense of the court was not left in doubt. The decision was rendered primarily upon the technical legal question of whether the lower courts had a right to con-sider a review of a decree which had once been agreed to by the defendants.

The five packers, Swift & Co., Armour & Co., Morris & Co., Wilson & Co. (Inc.), and the Cudahy Packing Company, it was alleged, had branched out from being strictly packers of meat products and had acquired or attempted to acquire stockyards, terminal railroads and market journals; were acquiring plants to pack and to sell 114 enumerated food products and 30 other articles of commerce, including milk and cream; had acquired refrigerating plants and retail stores, and had in numerous ways attempted to engage in the manufacture, obbing, selling and transportation of these related food products. After considerable investigation and upon the initiation of court proceedings by the Department of Justice, the sckers consented to accept a decree whereby they agreed to desist from such subsidiary operations and to divest themselves of such properties as they had acquired. This decree was signed and entered Feb. 27, 1920. Since that time, of course, many changes have come about in the packing industry.

Later the California Co-operative Canners petitioned for a review of the decision, claiming they had been injured inasmuch as they had entered into contracts with the defendants whereby the packers had agreed to distribute their canned goods, which contract was nullified by the consent decree. Swift and Armour later joined in the petition and it was these issues which were carried to the Supreme Court. The two national wholesale grocery associations intervened to oppose the reopening of the decree.

In substance the Supreme Court held that the decree was properly entered, that it was properly considered by the courts of review and that the original decision is binding. This effectually disposes of the question of whether the court may enter a decree without considering the verity of the evidence in the case. The Supreme Court made this statement:

The defendants ignore the fact that by consenting to the entry of the decree, "without any findings of fact," they left to the court the power to construe the pleadings, and, in so doing, to find in them the existence of circumstances of danger which justified compelling the defendants to abandon all participation in these businesses, to divest themselves of their interest therein, and to abandon acquiring any interest thereifter. to abstain from acquiring any interest thereafter.

The easy inference from this final decision would seem to be that the Supreme Court has attested its sanction to an antitrust policy in the United States which forbids the organization of vertical trusts. Yet it will appear upon a more careful reading of the decision that such is not definitely set forth at all. The court certainly upholds the decree of 1920, consented to by the packers, on technical grounds and has refrained from reviewing the economics of the question at all. No evidence has as yet been considered as to whether the vertical trust which might have been formed would have worked injury to any potential competitor or would have unreasonably restrained interstate trade in food products.

Closer Contacts; Less Formality

DETURNING from a recent extended tour of the United States, Philip Kerr, secretary to Lloyd George during the war and now associated with the Rhodes Scholarship Trust, essayed to reflect, before an assemblage of British statesmen, American opinion as he found it. His advice is to go slow on treaties and conferences for the next few years, meantime seeing to it that more initimate contacts are formed between British and American financiers, business men and journalists, and even the highest officials of the two governments.

The proposal is by no means a novel one so far as it has to do with informal interchanges and the preparation which must precede the reaching of any satisfactory political agreement. His plain implication is that recent failures to reach complete accord have been due, at least in large part, to the intensive publicity which such conferences have received. The possibility of failure because of misunderstanding might be avoided, he believes, with the preparatory work more carefully done.

Looking backward to Geneva, the inclination is to believe that the correctness of Mr. Kerr's view was there measurably substantiated. A conference that in fact should have placed the stamp of deliberative authority upon an agreement already tentatively formulated in public thought, failed at a crucial period because there. was lacking that evidence of popular accord without which any friendly compact must, sooner or later, be defeated.

But the argument is not directed against open diplomacy as such. The publicity given the deliberations at the Geneva conference referred to served only to emphasize and illuminate a condition which did not actually reflect public sentiment as it existed then and as it now exists. There was not expressed in the conference that popular accord which, given free and full exession, would certainly have turned the tide in the right direction.

Mr. Kerr, describing American opinion as he claims to have found it, told his audience that all the United States demands for its navy is equality, not inferiority nor predominance, and for freedom of the seas for neutral commerce in time of war. His inference seems to be that these conditions must be considered in any future conference dealing with naval limitations, and that it is only through the medium of freer interchanges and still more open diplomatic conversations and deliberations that common ground can be reached.

When to Go to College

WERE each child moved along through school at a pace heat suited to individual growth and unfoldment, the question of the proper age at which to enter college would probably never come up for general discussion. But while public education in the United States is conducted for the mass rather than for the individual, the question of age has to be determined largely by standards which are both general and arbitrary. Standardization of school systems throughout the country has been such as to chuse almost everyone to take it for granted that the schools would turn out students ready for college at about the age of eighteen. There is somewhat of a stir, therefore, when some school systems begin graduating their boys and girls in eleven years instead of twelve, and when a college authority like A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard, recommends, as he did in his annual report and in an address before a large body of educators recently, that high schools allow pupils to graduate at sixteen or seventeen years of age, and that these be permitted to enter college at once.

This last plea has immediately called out widely differing replies from two large groups of educators, the department of superintendence of the National Education Association and the progressive school men. Frank D. Boynton, the new president of the department of superintendence, says that the high schools do graduate pupils sixteen and seventeen years old; that he knows several schools where one-third of the graduates each year run under seventeen years of age. He further declares that "colleges have to be petitioned to make exceptions and to admit these children who are graduated so young that the colleges don't want them."

But progressive school men base their remarks upon the idea that age in years has little to do with it. They feel that the first considera-tion should be, "Has the young man reached the place where he is socially ready to make the great change that going from high school to college entails? Has he reached a certain maturity of point of view, which will make it reasonably easy for him to adjust himself to the radically different ways of living and modes of study?"

Because a student is mature academically does not mean that he is mature in other ways. The progressive branch of lower education further maintains that if the college wants the traditional type of applicant who stores away bundles of knowledge, such can be trained in quicker and still quicker time, but if it wants the kind of student who has become confident in the intelligent handling of knowledge and who has learned to think for himself, then a longer period of preparation is usually necessary.

Juvenile Employment in Britain

THE placing of the child in employment suited to its temperament, and in conditions where it will have prospects of permanence and opportunity for advancement, so that it may have its feet placed upon the ladder of a career, is the meritorious object of a new organization just established by the British Government. This organization is to be known as "the National Advisory Council for Juvenile Employment in England and Wales." The Earl of Shaftesbury is the chairman. The members include representatives of local authorities, the teaching profession, the National Confederation of Employers' Organizations, the Trade Union Congress General Council, and the Ministry of Labor.

The establishment of this organization is one of the outcomes of valuable recommendations made in 1926 by a committee under Dougal Orme Malcolm, British South Africa Company director, which looked into the educational side of the question of enabling young persons (that is boys and girls under eighteen years of age who are no longer under obligation to attend school) to enter into and retain suitable employment.

The new council is to carry the work further by acting as an adviser to the Government in practical measures arising out of the recommendations of the Malcolm committee. Especially is it to help to keep the technical advisers of the Government in touch with public bodies, so that the educational policy of the State may be shaped as far as possible upon lines calculated to equip the child to take a worthy part in the nation's activities.

"We are deeply impressed," said the Malcolm committee, "by the importance of our inquiry, and are convinced that no effort is too great to insure that boys and girls are launched on careers which will bring happiness to them as individuals and prosperity to the State." This statement in no way exaggerates the nature of the task. The council now constituted for England and Wales is to be supplemented by a similar organization for Scotland. It enters upon its duties with good will from all.

Tomorrow's Statesmen

REPRESENTATIVE group of the undergraduates of New England colleges will participate in a League of Nations Model Assembly to be held at Amherst College, April 7. Model assemblies, sponsored by students, were held last year in Syracuse and Cornell. At Amherst it is planned to have the countries of the League represented, in so far as possible, by nationals of those countries who are now members of various student bodies. This arrangement will make possible an undergraduate forum for the exchange of opinion between the many foreign students now resident in the educational institutions of the New England area.

The questions to be discussed at Amherst closely parallel those now to the fore in Geneva, and the discussions will be carried out under League procedure. At least one of the members of the League Secretariat will be present throughout the sessions. A prominent American authority on international law and a former member of the League Secretariat will constructively criticize the Assembly at the termination of the day's program. Moreover, several organizations engaged in the field of international relations will send "observers" to Amherst for the occasion.

The setting up of these model assemblies at Amherst and elsewhere will have the effect of evolving for the young people who share in this type of a project a new political idealism, the motivating energy of which is to be found in the needs of the whole world. Politics is viewed as a matter of universal significance. Political perspectives are widened. Citizenship is interpreted in terms of loyalty to those ideals of international co-operation that make for national solidarity and world security. These young people at Amherst are setting a good example before their elders in thus devoting themselves to an analytical and constructive inquiry into world problems. They are preparing themselves in this very practical manner to assume their full share of responsibility in the making of the future.

· Tennis is now taking its place among those sports which are so popular that the large tour-naments are "sold out" months before they are due to start. The Wimbledon tournament for the English championships is not scheduled to start until June 25, and yet more than 11,000 applications for seats have already been refused because all the seats have been taken.

Mary Pickford, writing of the early days of the nickelodeon when seats sold for five cents and she was glad to get $5 a day, likes to think of those beginnings. She says, "it makes me . . . grateful for what pictures have given me." The world, too, should be grateful for what she has given to it.

The Diary of a Political Pilgrim

THE renewed dispute between the British and Egyptian Governments as to the permanent relations which are to exist between the two countries is but one more illustration of the difficulty of reconciling democratic theory and practice in non-European countries. It is another manifestation of the same difficulty as exists in India, in the Philippines, in China and elsewhere. Democracy in the West has been the outgrowth of a long development of individual rights, individual responsibility, individual independence and self-control. Democracy appears out of the high civilization of the city state racy sprang out of the high civilization of the city state of Athens and obtained renewed impetus first in Britain, then in the United States, and finally in Europe, as a result of the Reformation, which was based upon the idea of individual judgment, and of the Renaissance which gave the half-forgotten literature of Greece once more to the world.

Democracy, in any true sense of the word, is only possible where a sufficient proportion of the people are educated, are independent in their thinking and action, and are able to recognize the necessity of following reason and justice and common sense instead of appeals to crude self-interest or fanaticism. Where these qualities have not been put on, democratic forms of government speedily degenerate into new forms of autocracy, as in Russia or Fascist Italy, or into chaos, as in China.

+ + + The real difficulty in Egypt has been that the political classes, intoxicated by the new political slogans imported into a politically quite inexperienced country during the World War, have so imprisoned their mentalities in abstract democratic and nationalist formulæ that they have not yet realized that self-government means a capacity for dealing with practical problems. Like their fellows elsewhere, they have demanded absolute independence with the utmost consistency and vehemence in public, when the facts, which they admit quite freely in private, make it quite impossible to concede such independence in practice.

In 1922 Great Britain, after having been in occupation of Egypt for some forty years, during which time, by almost universal admission it had raised the country from a condition of extreme poverty and lawless oppression to a condition of quite exceptional prosperity, justice and order, decided, as the result_of the long agitation of Zaghlul Pasha, to recognize Egypt's independence once more. It did so, conditionally upon an agreement being reached between the two countries on four outstanding

In order, however, that there might be a genuine agree ment, Egypt was left to draw up its own Constitution and to elect its own Parliament under that Constitution, so that its Government might truly represent it in the negotiations. After some delays the Constitution was drawn up and ratified and an entirely independent Parliament

This, however, did not solve the problem, because the Parliament proved to be under the control of the extreme element and persisted in refusing any arrangement with Great Britain unless it was accompanied by the complete evacuation of Egypt by the British. After increasing agitation and a number of political murders, culminating in the assassination of Sir Lee Stack, Great Britain sent an ultimatum to Egypt which successfully ended violence and restored British advisers in certain departments whose efficiency and honesty had become badly under-

During the past year, after things had quieted down and after the passing of Zaghlul Pasha, negotiations were opened between the Egyptian Prime Minister, Sarwat Pasha, and Sir Austen Chamberlain for a settlement of the four outstanding points. These were the security of the Suez Canal, the defense of Egypt from invasion by other powers, the protection of the large foreign com-

THE renewed dispute between the British and Egyptian Governments as to the permanent relations which are to exist between the two countries is but one more illustration of the difficulty of reconciling democratic theory and practice in non-European countries. It is another manifestation of the same difficulty as exists in India, in the Philippines, in China and elsewhere.

Democracy in the West has been the outgrowth of a long development of individual rights, individual responsibility, individual independence and self-control. Democracy sprang out of the high civilization of the city state of Athens and obtained renewed impetus first in Britain, then in the United States, and finally in Europe, as a result of the Reformation, which was based upon the idea of individual judgment, and of the Renaissance which of justice and finance.

The main difficulty centered not so much about the maintenance of British troops in Egypt as about the question of where the troops should be stationed. At present they are in Cairo itself and in its citadel, Egyptian national opinion felt strongly that the permanent occupa-tion of their capital was incompatible with independence. The practical problem was to find any other suitable place, because the Suez Canal runs through the desert and because the water supply for troops stationed on the canal comes through Cairo itself.

Sarwat Pasha and Sir Austen Chamberlain agreed to solve the difficulty by providing that if, after ten years, no satisfactory agreement about the localities in which the troops were to be stationed had been reached the matter should be referred to the Lesgue of Nations as a neutral authority for settlement, Egypt having the right to bring the matter before the League at intervals of five years in the event of its being dissatisfied with the

No sooner, however, did Sarwat Pasha submit this agreement to the Wafd, as the Nationalist Party is called, than it immediately refused to have anything to do with it. It decided that the Cabinet should reply that the draft treaty was inacceptable because it was "incompatible with the independence and sovereignty of Egypt and that it legalized occupation of the country by British forces."
Sarwat Pasha accordingly resigned, the British Government issued a warning against violent action and subversive legislation, and the student riots followed.

In abstract theory the nationalist logic is unanswerable. If you recognize a country's independence, how can you at the same time claim to maintain troops within it? But theoretic logic does not alter the actual facts of the situation, that Great Britain is determined to protect the Suez Canal, which was not built by Egypt, that there is in Egypt a large foreign population which, as yet, has no confidence in the justice or stability of the Egyptian administration, and that both from the standpoint of defense and of the Sudan it is impossible for Great Britain to evacuate British troops altogether until Egypt has demonstrated her capacity to maintain a stable and adequate government of her own.

There have been many people who have held that the negotiations were begun too soon. It is far easier for people to acquiesce in facts of this kind than to recognize them in formal treaties. It is possible, therefore, that the question of drawing up any formal treaty will be allowed to lapse until the experiment in self-government on democratic lines has lasted a good deal longer and the internal situation warrants a definite change.

The immediate question, however, is whether the Nationalist leaders, having vindicated their position by a logical declaration, will settle down to make a success of the task of administration, or whether, swayed by extremists, they will persist in rejecting the advice of the wisest of the Egyptian leaders and foment inefficiency and vio-lence in the quite vain hope of forcing Great Britain to evacuate the country before a stable form of self-govern-ment has been built up by the Egyptians themselves.

THIS pandering to a low instinct on the assertion that generally. It is not true that newspapers, theaters, and moving pictures are compelled to depict in colorful extravagance the mark of the beast in order to gain an audience. These forces could combat the increase crime and lift the thoughts of the public to the good, the true and the beautiful if they would, and each of them in its particular avenue has the choice of appealing to the man or the beast.

The argument that the public demands that the mark of the beast be recognized as a matter of business is met many manifestations that the public will and does give liberal support to cleanliness in thought and utterance. Clean publications, clean dramas, clean moving pictures find a patronage unquestioned, liberal and satisfied, happy in the fact that they need not apologize for the reading or the presence.—Lubbock (Tex.) THE Globe is unable to sympathize with the plaint of the many correspondents who continue to forward pro-tests concerning the short measurement in the contents of bottles sold by the Ontario Government at its liquor stores. #### Great Men Today

THE Archbishop of Canterbury has been complaining of I the absence of great, outstanding personalities in these days, as compared with forty years ago, and the question arises, how far a contemporary can really judge of the greatness of those whose careers await the judgment of

The passing of Thomas Hardy has left Mr. Rudyard Kipling in almost solitary grandeur on the mountain of literature, though Mr. Bernard Shaw may have a seat upon the peak. In science there are many men of extraordinary ability, but it would be difficult for the layman to name anyone who possessed the imaginative genius of Darwin the sledge-hammer pugnacity and sincerity of Thomas History, however, may well discover that we have been unjust in our judgment of our contemporaries, and though it is past hoping that our descendants will look back to the years immediately after the Great War as a golden age, they may well find more to admire in the natural gifts of our great men than our short sight is capable of perceiving. -London Morning Post.

That "Increased Drunkenness"

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR: An article put forth by the Moderation League and going the rounds of the wet press reminds me of an old peddler of my boyhood days, who, in defending himself against the charge of misrepresentation, said, "If I lie about my goods, I do so in moderation."

This Moderation League, one of the prominent wet or ganizations, has reported on the arrests for drunkenness in many cities of the United States. They ignore all increase in population and the greater rigidity in arrests demanded of police departments by the automobile and other industrial enterprises. They also incorrectly report the year 1919 as the "year before national prohibition," for the United States had war-time national prohibition a large part of this year. This war-time national prohibition worked so well that it was partly responsible for putting over the prohibition amendment.

For instance, this league gives the arrests for drunkenness in Oakland, Calif. (my own city) in 1919 as 1896 and shows correctly a gradual increase, till in 1926 the arrests were 3583. But the arrests for drunkenness in Oakland in 1918, the true "year before national prohibition" were 7238. In other words, the arrests for drunkenness in Oakland before prohibition were more than twice as great as eight years later when the city had nearly twice as much population and had far more rigid arrests for drunkenness. Oakland, Calif.
